Africa. Day and night safari.

Arthur Radclyffe Dugmore (1870-1955) was a pioneering English photographer, painter and author who worked closely with the subject of the natural world, primarily animals. His interest for travelling came from his father, who bought a schooner when Dugmore was twelve years old – allowing him to travel the oceans. Although he initially struggled to make his way as he had little or no schooling, moving to New York, he pursued his dream as an artist. He opened a studio, attempting to make a living by painting birds. Dugmore was then luckily offered a job to go to Northern Canada to study and paint.

Influenced by both the writings of Sir Samuel Baker and his brother who travelled from Mombasa to Uganda and having seen the animal paradise, Dugmore's interest for Africa arose. In preparation to travel, he began to 'hunt' the forests of Eastern North America using his camera, that he had not much knowledge on, and gradually built the skills to work with flashlight devices suited for night safari. With the support of Alfred Stieglitz he became a successful photograph, awarded for several photographsthat made the covers of wildlife magazines. He became financially capable to travel, to gather material for his photographs and books. He traveled to British East Africa (present-day Kenya) on photo safari in 1908-1909 accompanied by a Masai guide, James L. Clark, and a youthful scientist with the American Museum of Natural History in New York. From Mombasa, he took the Uganda Railways to Nairobi. From Kiu, moved to Athi Plains and Ol Donyo Sabuk. Then off to Yatta Plains, Thika and Tana Rivers area such as Simba camp.

This catalogue contains photographs of both daytime and night Safari as 'in British East Africa flashlight photography may be found at its very best, the possibilities are almost unlimited, the conditions most wonderfully favorable, and the variety of animal life as varied as the most ambitious could wish.'<sup>1</sup>

His photographic records of the 1500 miles of travelling in four months was then compiled into a book, Camera Adventures in the African Wilds: Being an Account of a Four Months' Expedition in British East Africa, for the purpose of securing photographs from life of the game of 1910. He explained that none of his photos were retouched or faked as his attempt here was to allow the public audience to gain special access to the real natural world through photography.

'Someday I will come back to that continent which has an inexhaustible charm for all who have known it.'<sup>2</sup>
